

SEPTEMBER 10 PUBLIC HEARING

Closing Landers won't fix anything.

The real numbers, in plain language — for the families and the staff this actually affects.

Every figure here traces to the district's own budget, staffing table, and school data.

WHAT THEY'LL TELL YOU VS. WHAT'S TRUE

$908,176. That's not what they keep.

WHAT GETS ANNOUNCED

$908,176

If every job at the school is cut — principal to cafeteria staff.

$156,936

After buses, lost funding, and the cost of the layoffs themselves.

That's the extreme case — only if the board fires the counselor and the cafeteria staff too.

REAL PEOPLE, NOT LINE ITEMS

12 jobs. If the district goes all the way.

4

Principal, office staff, librarian

+3

Custodian, expanded learning, noon supervision

+5

Nutrition staff, counselor, intervention teachers

These aren't positions on a spreadsheet. They're your neighbors.

NOBODY'S COUNTING THIS

Yucca Mesa isn't ready either.

4–5 new classrooms

likely needed to absorb Landers' ~100 kids without overcrowding

Yucca Mesa is already big enough to run full classes on its own. Add 100 more students and several grades likely need a whole new section — which means new teachers. A rough estimate: $400,000–$500,000 a year. That number is nowhere in the district's math.

SCALE

This doesn't fix anything.

Closing Landers is worth 3 percent of the deficit. Fixing the district office alone would be worth 68 percent.

MEANWHILE, IN THE DISTRICT OFFICE

Six raises. $518,048. Four years.

Plus $240,000 for one retirement deal. $758,048 total — nearly five times what closing Landers nets, best case.

Net savings from closing Landers, best case

+$156,936

Cost of the raises, four years

-$518,048

If this were really about the money, the raises would be the first thing on the table.

This isn't a line item. It's people.

200

people came to the Winter Performance — more than the school enrolls

Landers is fixing the one problem — absenteeism — that's actually improving

Real programs run here for kids who need real support

SHOW UP. SPEAK UP.

If this were about money, they'd start with their own office.

Closing Landers

nets barely $156,936 a year, even in the best case

The receiving school

isn't ready either — and nobody's counting that cost

The whole thing

fixes about 3 percent of the actual deficit

Six raises

cost nearly five times more than closing Landers “saves”
